

MIZI – Deep internet Cuts

Linear Notes

A deep scan of the youtube sphere. Hidden gems and rare finds re-composed.

A number of untitled videos, pronunciation videos, high school choir practices, accidental uploads and compression algorithm tests has been meticulously collected, edited and rearranged, resulting in an hour long “deep internet music” radio piece.

Strictly under 20 views.

Deep internet music’s almost an inside joke on the internet realm. A microgenre of the memetic internet culture subgenres of vaporwave, nightcore, signalwave, mallsoft & hard-vapor. The origins of the genre can be traced back to this particular /mu/ (music) thread on the 4chan image-board (<https://4archive.org/board/mu/thread/62020388>). In this thread the OP states: “A subgenre of noise, found sounds, and musique concrete. Super obscure, short, and/or low-quality youtube videos, eschewing traditional notions of musicality. Anything with more than 20 views is excluded by default.”

With the instructions set, it took very little time for a number of deep internet music projects to pop-up. What’s interesting about this specific microgenre is the lack of concrete aesthetics, instead the only rule of the genre focuses on the actual collection of the sound material. With no immediate stylistic constraints it is possible to trace very different deep internet music ranging from noise music to field-recording-phonographic music made by people that never physically been in the field. Deep internet music is a collective process and a large scale application of the plunderphonics ideas. Deep internet music is a meme of experimental music.

Deep internet cuts is a programme created based on the aforementioned ideas. Using obscure videos on a platform with millions (billions?) users and billions of views on single videos, deep internet cuts, makes visible the invisible and extracts music from that which is deeply burried on the information blizzard of youtube. Deep internet cuts is an original music composition or a very elaborate meme. You decide.
